Hours after I was born, my mother named me Grigori Efimovich Rasputin.

I would not have chosen that name for myself, but at the time I couldn't hold my head up or feed myself.

So my identity and my destiny were thrust upon me without my consent.

It happens.

In fact, it happens again and again, to all of us. We die according to how we lived and we live according to a plan most of us cannot see.

But I can see it. I've always known exactly what fate holds in store for me.

For instance, tonight I'm going to be murdered by my closest friends in the world.

These people.

THANK YOU, KATYA.

I'm quite certain the wine's been poisoned.

TO YOUR HEALTH, MY FRIENDS.

And to mine.
