

Okay, seriously... This place is creepy. How much longer until we're out of the woods?

That, sweet Babylon, depends entirely on how one would define 'where they really are.'

Of course, I suppose the simplest definition might be mathematical...

But wouldn't it actually be more accurate to label it as a midpoint state?

The prickly hell of now.

Not where you started, or where you want to be, but that undefinable place full of complications, and fraught with endless peri--

Hey! Watch where you're going.

Too much talking, not enough navigating.

Which is crazy, because I know from tactical simulations you have top end global positioning and mapping programs that are totally capable of precisely measuring distance.

You know exactly how much farther it is.

SNAP!

There you go.

It was a lesson, Babylon, and the lessons never stop.

Now... please hop on my face.

