MERCHANTS AND TRADERS

Early concepts for shopkeepers and merchants. It was decided early on that individual merchants needed to be unique, but their professions would be indicated visually at a distance through similar clothing and accessories.

Opposite, top: An early map seller. As originally envisaged, she and her family would have their shared cartographic knowledge stored on their bodies in the form of tattoos that only they could decipher, keeping their secrets safe.

SHIP'S CREST

It's bad luck to launch a ship without a name, and so a ship's crest always has pride of place above the door to the captain's quarters.
